Resource Management Reflection

This last project was not too bad of a time compared to the middle two projects in my opinion. I felt like we had a lot more time to prepare and complete the last game of the semester. This time I had the opportunity to work on the environment. This means I worked on the actual stage itself, the decorations around the stage, and making the different paths for the enemies. I also picked up some more responsibilities because Cole is now in the ER. So I picked up working on the enemies, how their death interacted with the game in different ways, and having them face the camera at all times.

I do feel like I could have gotten more done, though I did have other classes finishing up their projects for the year so I do feel as if the tower defense game was well made for our situationship. Also, I am very proud of how I designed the moving camera. That took a long while to get set up. Additionally, it was more of a crunch addition; I had first done a function where the stage would rotate instead of the camera, but I could never get the stage to rotate to stay in the camera. Thus, I had to switch late in the development process to making the moving camera. Other than that though, the overall development process went well and I do think this might be our best game this semester, topping our dungeon crawler!
