

Adam Slade

Dr. Card, Dr. Jhala

CSC 592

Apr 7, 2026

Escape Room Reflection

Coming back from the break, there was definitely crunch time to this project. I personally struggled with readjusting with my time management when coming back, and I held my team back because of that. However, the project is now complete again, and I believe that our work is still a good product for what we wanted to achieve.

In our escape room, we first start out with some dialogue. This is mostly to address the theme of metamorphosis as our character Dimitri talks to himself. After that dialogue, the player enters the main escape room map. There our puzzles revolved around searching for different items so that you could either use one item to open either a door or a box, or a set of four similar items to be put in order to either open a door, or unlock another part of the map. As the player explores the map they will originally see the room looking as normal; however, after completing certain puzzles, the room will change and open up for seemingly no reason. We used this to address the themes of absurdism.

Overall, the process was halted due to my inability to manage time correctly. I caused some back up at the end and had to stay up to complete my work. Thankfully, no one else had to stay up with me, so I thankfully did not cause anyone else to lose any sleep. Besides that, the process went somewhat smoothly. We wanted to add more complex puzzles like a morse code puzzle - where the user translates morse code. We also wanted to add a heartbeat rhythm style puzzle, and also a number lock puzzle as well. However, with the time constraints for this project, plus what I had mentioned above, we had to cut back on those additions and keep it simple for drag and drop puzzles. I did like how we added the changing rooms based on completing puzzles, and the different elements where you need to place items in a different order.

Overall, though successful, it was definitely not my best work. I want to strive to do my work in a more timely manner, and get my work done without having a crunch time.